A century has elapsed since the War Between the States wrested thousands of Americans from the security of boyhood and forced them into the reality of manhood. Conflict impressed maturity on these soldier-youths just as crisis impressed unity upon a growing nation. This war was a challenge of violence, demanding physical maturity. Our society has thrust upon us a challenge of education, demanding maturity of the mind. As we meet this challenge, so shall we fare as citizens of today's world.

To all the men who fought the Civil War and took death or hardship in it with the result of slavery being abolished and the American Union of States being assured for a long future.

Carl Sandburg

It is easy to appreciate the extent of the schedule of a man of Mr. Sandburg's stature. For the kindness he has shown in dedicating this year's annual, we are humbly grateful.

Administration

Brother R. Celestine
Principal

To evaluate the work of Brother Celestine in his six years at La Salle is to evaluate the entirety of the school and its students. For there is nothing at La Salle that Brother Celestine has not initiated, planned, and supervised. Unselfish dedication has resulted in the many physical and academic improvements that mark La Salle as outstanding. Unfaltering example has inspired and encouraged all of us in our own efforts. La Salle stands today as a tribute to our principal's efforts, and to this tribute we add our own sincere gratitude.

Brother T. Mel
Vice-Principal

Besides his duties as instructor in mathematics and religion, Brother Mel has been personally responsible for the newly initiated student counseling program. This job in itself has required countless hours of compiling, evaluating, organizing. Yet, as many grateful students will attest, he has never been too busy to give personal advice on any and every problem. Brother Mel has proved himself an able instructor, understanding advisor, efficient organizer, and invaluable asset to the school and its student body.

Mrs. Taillac
Office Secretary

Brother V. Maurice
Registrar

Despite their experience and capabilities, Mrs. Taillac, school secretary, and Brother Maurice, registrar, have found a full time job in recording and mailing students' grades, registering new students, handling the school finances, and the thousand other duties necessary for a smoothly-running educational process. Although they have constantly been busy with important work, they have never lost their power to smile and give cheerful aid to students. It is this personal thoughtfulness set in a background of efficiency that has made our office staff a source of such great pride to La Salle.

Seniors

Emerging from three years of carefully guided development, the senior suddenly discovers that he is now the developer. It is the senior that is copied and admired by the other students. It is the senior, also, that is most carefully judged as his school's representative. For this dual role of student leader and social representative, the senior must call upon all the maturity three years of high school have given him. And in properly fulfilling the task which is his, he finds that a new maturity, stronger than ever before, is developing within himself.

The class of '62 has met the challenge of the senior year with unprecedented maturity and enthusiasm. Freshman welcome week, the Jazz Festival, the senior work day, the Prom, all were successful due to planning and leadership of the senior class. Brother Emery, moderator, has worked diligently with his senior council, under Mike Johnson, to direct the class efforts. The seniors can be grateful to La Salle for developing them into manhood, but they can also be justly proud for their part in the development of La Salle.

Organizations

In any well-rounded student body there can be found students of many diversified talents and interests. Organizing these students into cohesive and useful units is a tremendous job. But the value of special interest organizations in a student body makes the task of forming them well worth the effort. Organizations build up school spirit a hundred different ways. They draw students closer to each other and to their school. Each group contributes a new aspect of accomplishment to the school's record and opens new fields of activity for the many students of untapped abilities. Finally, organizing the organizations into a student government which represents the real interests of the entire student body.

Battle of Shiloh
April 6-7, 1862
Albert Sidney Johnston attempted to halt Grant's drive into Tennessee. Johnston's surprise of Grant's forces raised hopes of a Southern victory but his sudden death reversed the battle and dashed Confederate hopes.

The student body of La Salle can take real pride in those they have chosen to represent them. Displaying the qualities of leadership and maturity, the members of the council have created a unique interest in self-government and school affairs—greater this year than ever before. Constant and unselfish participation in student direction has molded them into a corps of efficient leaders.

The Honor Society is a group of students who have distinguished themselves academically and who wish to promote scholarship, service, leadership, and character in the students of La Salle. With these aims the society has published the Guidance Handbook which explains the grading and testing systems in use. In addition the publication of the bi-weekly news bulletin and the maintenance of a tutoring service are projects of the Club. By membership in the National Honor Society, La Salle gives recognition to students who have earned it and provides educational services for those who wish them

Serving as the leading vehicle of creative expression of the students, The Lance has become a unique publication embodying the literary spirit of La Salle. Because it has the current interest of a newspaper and the handy format of a magazine, this quarterly selects from a broad variety of literary forms and authors. Included are news articles, essays of opinion, poems, and sketches.

The small group pictured here works almost constantly throughout the year with their moderator preparing for the next issue by selecting and discussing the material.

Working to make this book an accurate and artistic image of the past year as well as a sample of the talents of the students, the La Salle staff attempts to capture and record the significant aspects of school life and forge them into a lasting memorial. From the mass of personalities and events the staff has the difficult task of determining which are the most outstanding and arranging them in an imaginative manner suited to the theme. Yet the individual student and the informal moment are not overlooked in the creation of this profile of La Salle.

In September, the Lettermen's Society opened the school's social year with the highly successful Welcome Freshmen sock hop. Since then, the lettermen have remained active on many projects in the school's interests. Volunteer letterman patrols have maintained order at student functions, served on clean-up crews, and performed innumerable smaller tasks. The Society-sponsored grammar school basketball tournament again established the school's prestige among potential students. Organized and industrious, the lettermen of La Salle have firmly proven their right to our respect.

Under the skillful direction of Mr. Robert Alcorn, the Club has presented several plays, provided educational field trips to local stage plays, and was instrumental in furnishing the stage with theatrical equipment.

In addition to discovering and displaying talent on stage, the Club has formed a permanent organization to take care of theatrical production and backstage details. Outstanding members include Jim Godfrey, president; Tony Robinson, stage manager; Joe Eiben, Neil McIlwee and Jerry Geron assistants.

Artist Guild

By cultivating an aesthetic spirit and maintaining it through practical services to the student body, the Artists' Guild has had a profound effect on La Salle. Under the imaginative leadership of Brother Harold and Tad Hunter, the Guild has acquainted the students with the fine arts and enriched the quality of the advertising posters.

The Guild started the year with an exhibition of the members work which drew favorable comment from students and parents alike. On several occasions the Guild has decorated for dances and visited neighboring art museums.

The Peninsular Campaign

April-July, 1862

Major General McClellan moved the army of the Potomac against the Confederate Capital of Richmond by way of the peninsula, the Union failure was due in great part to Jackson's activities elsewhere and with Lee taking the initiative away from McClellan.

The junior is in a transition period of social development. Often his duties lie merely in cooperating with the student leaders he has helped to choose. But now he is an upper classman, and he must garner from these duties the experience that will make him a capable student leader in the near future. He has the further duty of exemplar to the students of the lower division. Assuming these new chores while retaining the old makes the third year difficult but valuable. For such a period of transition is always filled with rich experience and memories. Many graduates think of their junior year most often when recalling their high school days. But the junior must work to make his activities memorable; he must cooperate and learn; he must assume responsibility and begin to lead.

Student Activities

Battle of Gettysburg

July 1-3, 1863

The failure of Pickett's historic charge ended the Confederate invasion of Pennsylvania and doomed the South's cause. Dejected, Lee led his battered divisions south.

The real mark of school spirit in any student body is the number of activities carried on within it. As a school develops, the quality of and the participation in such activities also increases. The student will remember most of those times when he was enthusiastically supporting his school, either through physical effort or vocal encouragement. And he will be best developed by activities such as religious services or school improvements. Finally, he best serves his school when participating in such programs as drama presentations or musical programs which add to the school's reputation. By recognizing and joining his school's activities the student gains memories and experience that will serve him well in later life.

Senior Activities

Tim Murphy makes morning announcements over the P.A. system.

Seniors celebrate victory after tug-of-war with Juniors.

As narrator at Friday Masses Mike Eitelj reads the Gospel.

Landscaping in front of the gymnasium proves to be a full day's work for these seniors.

Lindley and Read play flamenco.

Seniors loading on truck the last of twenty-three tons of catfish hauled away on work day.

Alfaro, Caldiero, and Sterling 'Decorating' for the Senior Dance.

Tim Sweeney, Dave Balak, Bruce Rowe, and John Driscoll assist Father Bardwell in the Great Entrance, which symbolizes the Bearing of Gifts in the Eastern Liturgy.

Religious Activities

Extracurricular activities at La Salle are carefully integrated with religious exercises designed to produce a balanced Catholic citizen. The heart of these spiritual exercises is the weekly student body Mass. The efforts of our school Chaplain, Father Edward Dougery, with the frequent assistance of Father Raymond, C.P., as confessor and spiritual advisor cannot be underrated in affecting the Christian attitude of our students. La Salle High School's greatest distinguishing mark and highest honor is that it is a Christian school.

The Senior class opened this year's religious activities with a living rosary during the first week of school

Father Dougery administers communion to senior servers Larry Gonzales and John Brinton as other students prepare to receive

The La Salle Missions Council listens as Brother Maurice addresses student body in Madagascars Missions appeal

Another charitable effort was the Christmas food campaign. Here Brother Anthony instructs Steve Luder, John Mack, and Jerry Kenkel on the art of proper packing

Father Thiele, visiting missionary, lectures the students on Thailand mission work.

An interesting and unique religious activity was the Melchite Rite Mass offered by Father Bardouil

Frosh Welcome

Fourteen days after they entered La Salle, the freshmen were treated to a "Welcome Week," during which they were officially accepted as members of the Student Body. Formal attire was the order of the day as eager-to-please seniors initiated the frosh into the various delights of student life. The activities culminated in a Senior-Frosh workday, in which both classes combined to raise a huge cloud of dust and weeds and, in the process, managed to do an outstanding job of school improvements.

Hard-working organizers of the "Welcome Week" were Mike Johnson, Bud Burke, and Pat Randolph. Brother Emery was an ever present inspiration and aid. Tom Farley and Henry Cardoza were two of many seniors who were outstanding in their donations of time, labor, and materials to make the work day a success. This was the seniors first opportunity to demonstrate their leadership ability, and the success of the venture guaranteed success in future senior projects.

The opening of each day during Welcome Week found nattily-dressed freshmen in orderly ranks anticipating eagerly their next Senior-supervised activity.

Despite considerable vocal support from the seniors, the freshmen are here about to suffer a muddy defeat in the Soph-Frosh tug-of-war.

The Soph-Frosh volleyball contest was a little more even, though the sophomores were again victorious.

Seniors Johnson and Sterling direct mass worship of school on second day.

Freshmen fearlessly(?) face their initiators and ponder their fate.

The final day was marked by participation of all classes in a program of athletic contests and entertainment which cemented interclass friendship and healed differences.

When a student first deserts the elevated throne of grammar school graduate and assumes the lowly state of high school freshman, he is confused. Instructors, upperclassmen, the high school routine itself, all cry for adjustment. Yet the average freshman, though he senses a need for change, does not know how, or why, or where, to make this change. He spends most of his first year in just such a position, making slow progress, but nevertheless moving ahead. As a sophomore, the student resolves the confusion and discovers that finally he has become a part of his school. And he finds that in the confusion of the past two years he has made tremendous strides toward maturity.

Spottsylvania Courthouse
May 8, 1864

The bloody battle near Spottsylvania Courthouse was one of several attempts to stop Grant's march on Richmond. In the terrific battle of "Bloody Angle" Ewell's and Hill's defense cost Grant 17,000 to their 8,000

Sports

The greater the demands of his study program, the more necessary are athletics to a student's development. The immediate challenge of athletic competition develops aggressiveness and quick thinking, while the necessity of team effort develops organization and self-discipline. The physical and emotional outlet of maximum effort provides relaxation and a healthy competitive spirit. Sports are invaluable in uniting a student body in a bond of school spirit. Excellence in sports indicates a unified school spirit as well as a diversified student body.

Moving into a position of prominence, the Varsity quickly gained the confidence of the school and became known as "the team to watch" in the Pasadena area.

Participation in several tournaments gave the Lancers the needed practice and vital spirit that would carry them through to a climatic victory in the Santa Fe League Carnival in January.

La Salle led the Eastern Division (Pomona Catholic, Bosco Tech, and La Salle) to a 106-99 score, beating St. Francis 45-29 in its game.

Dearest Dan

As I sit here babysitting I think and so well remember all the fun and extra special good times we have shared in the past 4 years of our lives. I can remember when you used to chase me up the street and pull my ponytail til I screamed loud enough for everyone to come running. I also remember the all the fun and 'laughs' we have had babysitting at the Kelleys when we decide to make like soupy dolls and throw whip cream and cookies at each other.

I also want to thank beyond words your helping me in and out of all my boyfriend troubles no matter how small or stupid (like Georgie). Just never forget in your reclining years when you read this that I'll be thinking of how on earth I'll get out of the mess I have so talently gotten myself into doing, as usual just smiling and "standing up straight". I hope you won't forget me for quite some while and if you do, don't play sucker for any "j's". (Jan, Jan, Judy Jones). Say hi to Bob and Mac for me after I leave this heavenly place of Santa Rosa rd. and don't forget I'm the only one who always seems to get you into some kind of trouble with your mom or somebody.

I'll write at least once a week and maybe we can get together soon. I'll never forget you and that wonderful group of guys at La Salle who were so nice to me when I tried to share.
